Let's look for the dissertation of ANE's president, David Caruso.

After typing in his name, we'll choose author from the drop-down menu of choices for the search field.

Usually when you search for an author, you know a little bit about their research, which allows you to identify the dissertation when faced with more than one choice. Dr. Caruso studied child psychology, and the second dissertation here is the only one that falls under that category.

Notice also, that because Dr. Caruso wrote his dissertation before 1997, only an abstract is provided. Full-text of the dissertations and theses is only available for those written 1997 or later.

And you might have noticed that there is an option to purchase a copy, as well. You shouldn't need to do this, as there are two other options to obtain a copy of a dissertation or thesis in which you are interested. The first is to request the document through Interlibrary Loan/Document Delivery. There is a link for the ILL request form in the left-hand menu of the library's Web site. You can also contact a researcher directly to request a copy. Most researchers are happy to share their work with others.

Let's do another search, this time for the dissertation of Dr. Dottie Morris in the Applied Psychology Department. I think I remember that the title of her dissertation included the phrase "racial sensitivity, racial identity," so we can search for these in the "document title" field in this case.

Dr. Morris's dissertation is the fourth on the list. Notice that the full text is available and can be accessed by clicking on the link beneath the citation. You may have noted that Dr. Morris's dissertation is from 1992. Some dissertations written in the early 1990s are available in full-text, while all of the dissertations after 1997 should be available in full-text.
